Prepared by Kore.ai Competitive Intelligence

Bottom line: Competitors are aggressively pushing AI agent capabilities, with Salesforce and ServiceNow highlighting new B2B commerce and employee service applications, respectively. While Genesys deepens its AWS collaboration, the core threat remains the continued analyst validation gap for many players against Kore.ai's leadership in the conversational AI for customer service market.

WHAT MATTERS THIS RUN

Three signals that matter

Salesforce Launches WhatsApp/SMS B2B Commerce Agent

WHAT HAPPENED
Salesforce's new B2B Commerce suite puts an AI buying agent on WhatsApp and SMS MarketScale WHAT IT MEANS FOR KORE.AI
This move highlights Salesforce's push to embed agentic capabilities into transactional workflows, a direct challenge to Kore.ai's platform breadth. We counter by emphasizing our true omnichannel capabilities and proven enterprise-grade governance, which are critical for regulated CX interactions that go beyond simple commerce.

Genesys Deepens AWS Collaboration for AI Innovation

WHAT HAPPENED
Genesys Deepens Strategic Collaboration with AWS to Accelerate Global AI Innovation Business Wire WHAT IT MEANS FOR KORE.AI
This partnership signals Genesys's continued reliance on hyperscaler infrastructure for AI advancement, potentially leading to integration complexities and vendor lock-in. Kore.ai's provider-agnostic approach and native AI capabilities offer greater flexibility and a more streamlined TCO, directly addressing customer concerns about multi-vendor dependencies.

ServiceNow CEO Defends Platform Relevancy with AI Kill Switch

WHAT HAPPENED
ServiceNow CEO defends the company's relevancy, touting a kill switch for rogue AI agents CNBC WHAT IT MEANS FOR KORE.AI
ServiceNow's emphasis on control mechanisms, while necessary, can be framed as a reactive measure to inherent platform risks. Kore.ai's ABL (Agent Behavior Language) offers proactive, compile-time validation and deterministic execution, providing a more robust and inherently safer foundation for enterprise AI agents, rather than relying on post-hoc "kill switches."
