Prepared by Kore.ai Competitive Intelligence

Bottom line: Salesforce's aggressive move to performance-based pricing for its Agentforce Help Agent directly challenges Kore.ai's outcome-driven value proposition, while Genesys and ServiceNow continue to expand their AI capabilities through acquisitions and partnerships, signaling a rapidly evolving market for agentic AI.

WHAT MATTERS THIS RUN

Three signals that matter

Agentforce Shifts to Performance-Based Pricing

WHAT HAPPENED
(2026-07-02) Salesforce unveiled its Agentforce Help Agent with performance-based pricing, charging only for resolved support cases, a model specifically highlighted in its launch in Korea. ■■■■■■, Chosunbiz WHAT IT MEANS FOR KORE.AI
This is a direct competitive move into outcome-based pricing, a core Kore.ai strength. Kore.ai should emphasize its proven, transparent cost attribution per agent/intent/tool and platform-agnostic approach, contrasting with Salesforce's history of pricing changes and Data Cloud lock-in.

Genesys Accelerates Agentic AI with Pinkfish Acquisition

WHAT HAPPENED
(2026-07-01) Genesys acquired Pinkfish, a move intended to accelerate its agentic AI capabilities and speed up contact center AI deployments. MarketScale, TechTarget, CMSWire WHAT IT MEANS FOR KORE.AI
This acquisition signals Genesys's urgency to bolster its agentic AI, suggesting its native capabilities may not be fully mature. Kore.ai can highlight its unified, purpose-built agentic platform and transparent cost attribution, contrasting with Genesys's bolt-on AI and unpredictable AI token consumption.

Five9 Undergoes Leadership Reshuffle Amidst Strategic Revamp

WHAT HAPPENED
(2026-07-02) Five9 announced three senior appointments amidst an ongoing "revamp" of its platform and strategic direction. Comms Business, Constellation Research WHAT IT MEANS FOR KORE.AI
This indicates continued organizational instability and strategic pressure at Five9, following previous layoffs and analyst downgrades due to its seat-based model's exposure to AI deflection. Kore.ai can leverage its stable, analyst-validated platform and cost-per-outcome model against Five9's roadmap continuity risk and unpredictable TCO.
